Transforming Violence Intervention in Health Care through Trauma-Informed Practice

The Healing Hurt People Program (Philadelphia, PA) is leading an exciting new learning cluster of the National Network to Eliminate Disparities (NNED) in Behavioral Health.

The mission of NNED is to build a national network of diverse racial, ethnic, cultural and sexual minority communities and organizations to promote policies, practices, standards and research to eliminate behavioral health disparities.

Healing Hurt People will lead a learning cluster focused on implementing trauma-informed practice as a standard to hospital-based and hospital-linked violence intervention programs and improving the effectiveness of health-care based violence intervention by connecting providers in a variety of settings around trauma-informed practice. Major Milestone in Preventing Violence: Representatives from 13 Urban Cities endorse UNITY's Urban Agenda for Preventing Violence Prevention Institute

Representatives from some of America's largest urban cities gathered in Washington, DC with one goal: to find the most effective means of preventing violence in their communities. The meeting, convened through Prevention Institute's Centers for Disease Control and Prevention's (CDC)-funded Urban Networks to Increase Thriving Youth (UNITY) initiative, resulted in a nearly unparalleled accomplishment. Law enforcement officials, community leaders, public health officials and representatives from mayors' offices from cities including San Diego, Cleveland, St. Louis and Boston unanimously approved a new platform for preventing violence across the country...click here for more.

Resource Spotlight: Positive Change Through Policy

This online guide features examples of policies that schools, localities, and states have implemented to create safer communities. The examples provided are meant to promote readers' interest in policies that can help make their community safer, particularly for young people. Also included are descriptions of programs that are a result of policy. After the examples are questions to help readers learn more about local policies and their community's needs.
